GLENDALE GETS TWO VICE PRESIDENTS IN PACIFIC SOUTHWEST

Big Bank and Trust Company Appoints D. H. Smith and Herman Nelson to Represent City Among Executives of Big Financial Organization

RETAIN PRESENT TITLES AS MANAGERS HERE

Selection Shows Faith of Big Institution in Prosperity of This District and Its Development Financially During the Years to Come

Among other important actions taken at a recent meeting of the board of directors of the Pacific-Southwest Trust & Savings bank was the appointment and promotion of D. H. Smith and Herman Nelson to be Glendale vice-presidents, and in addition they retain their titles of managers of the Brand boulevard and the Glendale avenue branches, respectively.

The appointment of two representative executives for Glendale shows the faith of this large institution in a bigger and greater Glendale and its importance in the development of the Pacific Southwest.

Mr. Nelson has been a resident and banker of Glendale for the past twelve years, and his knowledge of banking conditions in this community is valuable not only to the institution he represents, but to all of their customers.

Mr. Smith was formerly vice-president of the Bank of Glendale, which was merged with the Pacific Southwest Trust & Savings Bank and became a branch of this institution on August 23, 1920, and he has served as manager since that time. His residence and banking experience in Glendale has covered a period of over eleven years and he is well equipped to assume his new executive position and render valuable services to this community.

OPEN SEASON ON COUNCIL AMBITIONS

Anyone Who Wishes May File Now for the Election

Don't crowd, you candidates for the city council.

Stand in line.

Rumors, reports, rumblings, hearsays, statements, etc., etc., are being heard about the Glendale streets as to the mob of local citizens who will endeavor to squeeze into the two council chairs in the April election. Nothing definite has materialized, but from what can be learned it is a cinch that the crowd of prospective councilmen will be more than a mob—it will be an avalanche.

But those who have been glancing enviously toward a berth on the council should not be discouraged. Some two of Glendale's citizens must fill those two chairs and who knows, Mr. Laurel Seeker, but that one of those two may be you

Councilman Stephenson stated to a member of the Glendale Press staff this morning that he will not be a candidate for re-election.

Councilman Lapham could not be communicated with this morning, but Mrs. Lapham said that her husband has not definitely decided as to whether or not he will run. It depends to a great extent, says Mrs. Lapham, as to whether or not there is another candidate from the "west side."

So, folks, don't be bashful. Here are two "soft" jobs crying to be filled. Throw in your hats and help to make the occasion an extremely enjoyable one.

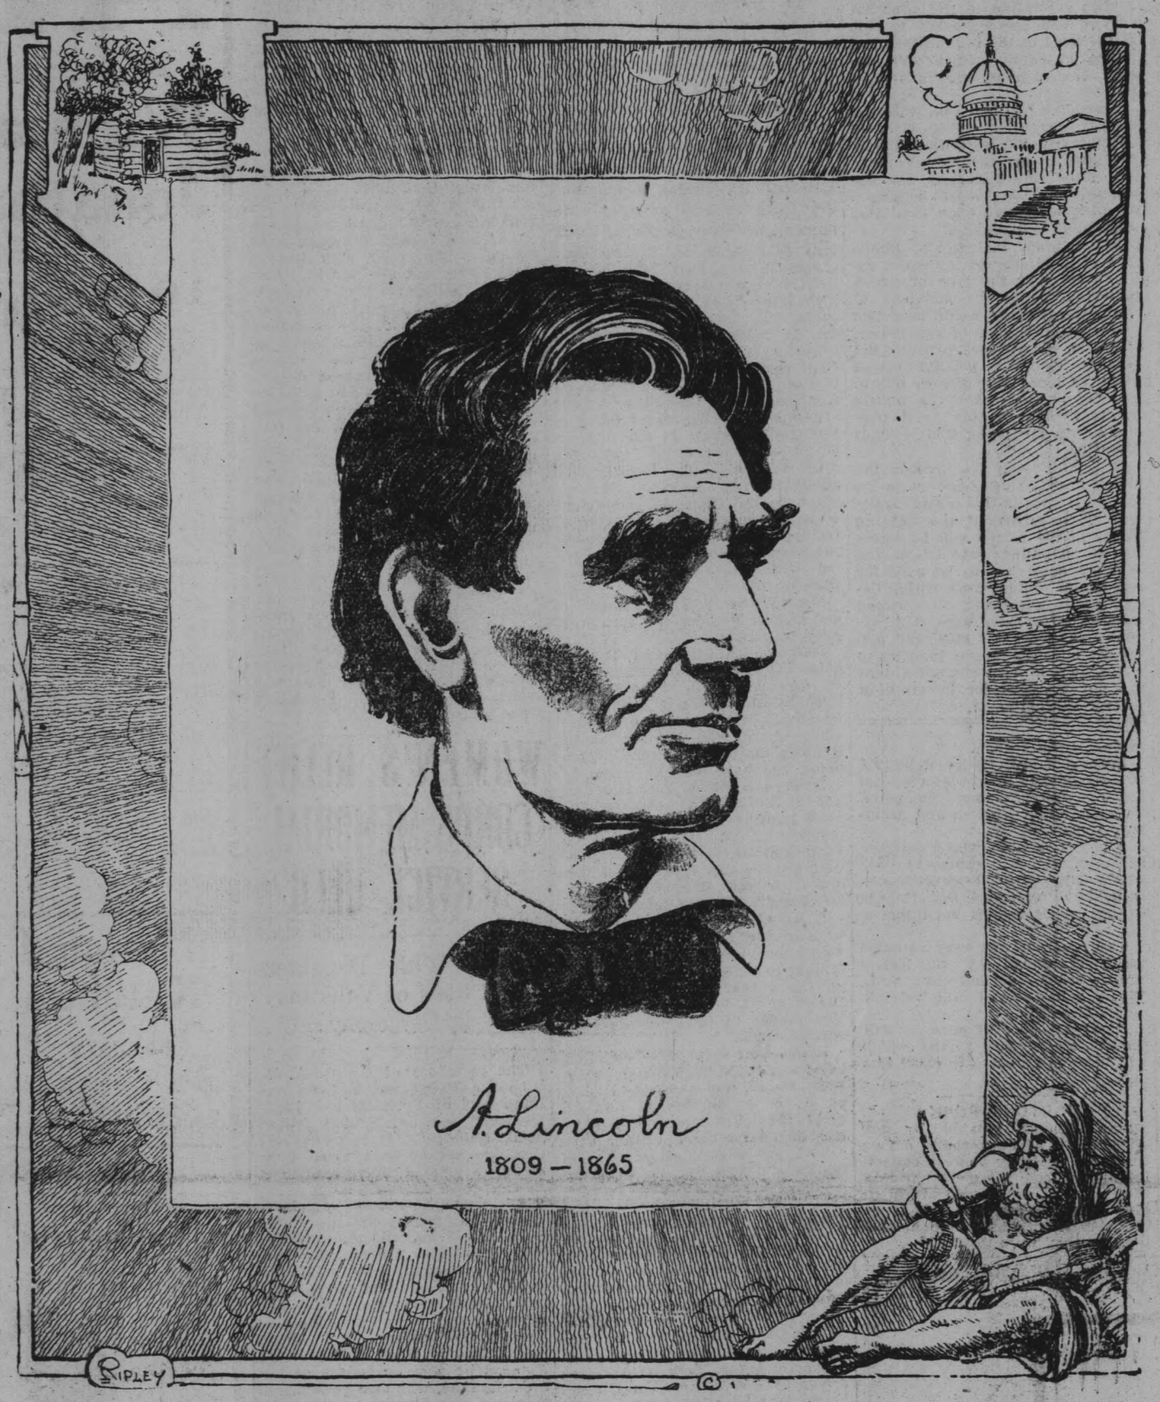
Candidates may file now with the city clerk.

Tuesday Club Makes $340 at Rummage Sale

The rummage and auction sale of the Tuesday Afternoon club ended triumphantly Saturday evening with patrons enjoying themselves and money flowing into the coffers of the Ways and Means committee to the tune of $340.

The turkey was won by Mrs. Ray J. Phillips. The duck went to some man patron, the name not being secured. The duck was donated by the Ideal Market. The clothing booth realized about $100 and the garments left will be distributed among charitable organizations. All the booths did well, the cooked food sales totalling about $30.

Mrs. Montgomery, committee chairman, is especially grateful to Robert Jensen, owner of the Palace Grand building, where the sale was held, for his generous assistance, and to Mr. Kuranaga.



Back in 1894 Maurice Thompson of Crawfordsville, Indiana, wrote a Phi Beta Kappa poem at Harvard, which is appropriate on this day. He called it "Lincoln's Grave." In it he seems to have felt the pulse and seen the vision of the advancing throng fighting for the freedom of the world.

"He is not dead. France knows he is not dead;
He stirs strong hearts in Spain and Germany;
In far Siberian mines his words are said;
He tells the English, Ireland shall be free;
He calls poor serfs about him in the night,
And whispers of a power that laughs at kings
And of a force that breaks the strongest chains.
Old Tyrany feels his might
Tearing away its deepest fastenings,
And jeweled scepters threaten him in vain."

CITY ACTORS SHOW TALENT IN REHEARSAL

Unsuspected Resources of Costuming Revealed in Dress Performance

The dress rehearsal on Sunday morning of the "Hand of the Prophet," a spectacular play to be produced Thursday evening at the Glendale Theatre following the first show, by the Community Players of this city, revealed unsuspected resources in the way of costuming by the amateurs of Glendale. Twenty players are to take part in the colorful drama and their robing calls for art and ingenuity.

The rich costume worn by Kodama, elderly prince, is said to be the handiwork of Mrs. George Kaeding, president of the Auxiliary of the Glendale Post, American Legion. She also made the coat worn by "Sindibad," a romantic lover. Besides these outside activities, Mrs. Kaeding has a role in the play, for which another dress rehearsal will be held some time during the week. Almena Bullock and Mildred Meeker, Kathleen and Dorothy Woods, Nell Few, Margaret Miller and Patsy Medyette have also displayed talent along the same line in the preparation of the costumes they are to wear.

This is one of the most ambitious dramatic performances ever attempted in Glendale by amateur talent and those who fail to see it will miss a treat.

The Community Service Players ask for the loan of large cushions to be used in this wonderful play Thursday evening at the Glendale Theatre. Many cushions are needed on which the guests and attendants should sit. The cushions will receive no hard usage or abuse. The Players have six cushions, but need about fifteen. Friends willing to lend cushions are asked to phone Nanno Woods, Glen. 394; Mrs. George Kaeding, Glen. 2683. Cushions will be called for Wednesday and returned Friday.

MUSIC TEMPLE HAS 2000 GUESTS

Opening of the Brunswick Shoppe, 123 S. Brand, Attracts Big Interest

The invitation to visit Glendale's "Temple of Music," the Glendale Phonograph company's artistic Brunswick Shoppe, which opened its doors at the new location, 123 South Brand boulevard, Saturday afternoon, was accepted by over 2000 people of the community, who visited this attractive place of business either in the afternoon or evening. Many were the expressions of admiration for the beauty of the interior decorating, which follows that of the Moorish architecture.

During the afternoon little Miss Jacqueline Barton, who only three months ago purchased a saxophone, offered entertainment for the crowd, as did also Miss Adeline Woodbury, who plays a baritone saxophone almost as large as herself. Miss Pansy Corp accompanied them at the piano. The Shrine club six-piece orchestra furnished music during the evening, when the crowd which gathered reached the curb.

Other features of entertainment were the song and dance numbers by Miss Woodbury and Miss Barton, accompanied by Miss Corp at the piano; vocal solo, "Call Me Back, Pal o' Mine," by Ole Andreson; vocal solo by Henry Cantor of the De Lara Opera company. Little Margaret Salmacia distributed souvenirs of walking paper dolls to the little folks who visited the store. A. M. Kelly, violinist, accompanied by Miss Corp, played "Three o'Clock in the Morning" and other popular numbers.

Vincent Salmacia and M. Lightner were hosts during the afternoon and evening reception and wish to extend an invitation to those who were unable to attend the opening on Saturday.

FILM 'PEG' IS BIG SUCCESS AT THE GLENDALE

Laurette Taylor, who won the hearts of a million people with her famous characterization of the delightful Peg in J. Hartley Manners' play, "Peg O' My Heart," was again seen in her celebrated role—this time in screen form. It was presented yesterday at the Glendale Theatre, and it is a safe assertion that the star has endeared herself even more to the vast audience which is certain to flock to see the film.

As a stage play, "Peg O' My Heart," has had one of the most phenomenal runs in theatrical history. It has had 6,608 performances in the United States alone. It has been played in England, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, India, Hawaii, Italy, Czecho-Slovakia and Paris. The screen now puts it within the range of enjoyment of people residing in communities not reached by stage performances.

Miss Taylor covers herself with distinction through her sympathetic and tender portrayal of "Peg" in the screen version. Shades of her whimsical character, never fully developed in the spoken play because of the natural limitations of the theatre, are depicted in the celluloid version, and it is the opinion of many who have seen the stage play that the photo-play even excels in charm of characterization Miss Taylor's own inimitable Peg of the footlights.

LETTER CARRIERS HOLD MERRY JINKS ON ANNIVERSARY

Jewel City branch 1983, National Association of Letter Carriers, celebrated its first anniversary with a jinks party Saturday evening at the K. of P. hall, and entertained members and families of members, clerks of the local postoffice and visitors from Los Angeles, Pasadena, and the suburbs of Glendale. O. W. Wright, president, called the meeting to order and after a few introductory remarks, turned it over to the entertainment committee composed of Al Holcomb, chairman; Newt Clark, and A. Faulkner.

The evening opened with the installation of officers by the Ladies' Auxiliary of 1983.

A delightful program was then presented by pupils of the Pearl Keller school, fancy dances being given by Kathryn Sonntag, Gould Moore, Marie Louise Brown, Patricia Carline, Julia Pelley, Elizabeth and Beatrice Turner. There were also recitations by Marjorie Turner and musical readings by Vivian Melone.

O. W. Wright and Newt Clark sang in duet; Howard Fraser executed a highland fling, for which Harry Fraser furnished bagpipe music.

Postmaster D. Ripley Jackson made a little speech.

Francis J. W. Henry delighted everybody with Scotch stories and songs. Harry James competed with stories of English and American humor.

William Gamble, state delegate at large, who will represent California at the national convention to be held at Providence, R. I., in September, made a short but interesting talk.

The program was very satisfactorily completed by the Kelley Shrine orchestra and by A. L. Wood, who served the refreshments provided.

It set a good stiff pace for subsequent anniversary parties which will have to go some to excel this one.

GOV. RICHARDSON TO OPEN SHOW OF SOLDIERS

As commander-in-chief of the State Militia, Governor Friend Richardson is expected to come to Los Angeles to formally open the "Soldier's Show," which the 160th Infantry regiment of the California National Guard will stage at Exposition Park from March 10 to 18 inclusive.

A special aide to Col. W. P. Story, commanding the Los Angeles regiment, will fly to Sacramento via aeroplane, to deliver a special invitation to the governor and he will also be asked to ride at the head of the big military and industrial parade which will proceed the opening night's festivities.

According to Lieut.-Col. Harcourt Hervey, executive officer assigned to supervise the festivities, and S. H. Barrett, director-general, plans are going ahead rapidly for the soldier's show, and it will be staged on an even larger scale than was originally contemplated.

Latest plans include the admission of a number of industrial exhibits to show the type of manufacturing plants the members of the national guard would be called on to protect in case of war or riot. It is Col. Story's idea to make the soldier's show a popular priced affair to bring the masses out to understand just what the militia is doing, and to this end nine admissions are being sold for half a dollar.

The militiamen are inviting the army, navy and marine corps to join with them in this ten-day frolic and all members of the fighting forces of the nation will be represented. All funds raised from the soldier's show are to be used for regimental welfare work within the regiment, supplying vocational training for enlisted men, sick benefits, unemployment aids, and giving the quarters certain luxuries to make the men more contented, that are not provided for by state or federal appropriation.

was a dilemma created by the Archbishop of Canterbury during the reign of Henry VII. In collecting money from the clergy he told the rich that they could afford to give because they had abundance and the poor that they could give because they were thrifty.

MANY ACCIDENTS IN GLENDALE OVER SUNDAY

Wet Streets and Careless Driving Make Much Trouble

Wet streets, careless driving and many other things contributed, over the week-end, to a number of automobile accidents in Glendale. The mania to speed and to get the best of the other fellow seems to have had the upper hand, and as a result several automobiles are in the hospital, a number of motorists are nursing wounds that are more or less serious, while numerous others are paying repair bills that could, by a little more careful driving, have been avoided.

Miss Myrtle Wilson, 1368 West 37th street, Los Angeles, was injured when a machine she was driving collided with a truck operated by C. J. Leasy of 140 West California, Pasadena, the accident taking place at the corner of Jackson street and Broadway, shortly afternoon. A misunderstanding of the traffic signals is supposed to be responsible for the accident. Miss Wilson was slightly cut about the face and head. She was taken to the Glendale sanitarium, where her injuries were dressed by Dr. Russell. Miss Ruth Swanson, 304 North Verdugo, who was in the car with Miss Wilson, was also slightly injured.

Miss Wilson was later taken to her home. Both of the cars were badly damaged.

Automobiles driven by E. Rehberg, 1329 East California, and W. W. Lee, 110 East Broadway, collided at the corner of Louise and Broadway at 12:15 o'clock, Sunday. One side of the bumper of the Rehberg machine was torn off, this being the only damage done.

Howard B. Moss, 1146 Rosedale, and J. McLaughlin of Burbank, were piloting machines that came together at the corner of Grand View and Glenwood, the accident taking place at 7:45 o'clock last night. A right front wheel of the McLaughlin car was damaged.

B. L. Cline, 134 North Orange, was driving a car that collided with a machine, the driver of which is unknown, the occident occuring at the corner of Broadway and Brand at 12:30 o'clock yesterday. The fender of the Cline machine was damaged.

Excitement reigned when a car belonging to Dr. W. Kennedy, 425½ West Doran, and another car driven by F. F. Mayton of Los Angeles, tangled bumpers at the corner of Central and Wilson at 2 o'clock Saturday afternon. The fender and the truss rods of the Kennedy car were broken and the side of the machine was damaged.

Another mishap that added to the festivities of the week-end was the accident that occurred at the corner of San Fernando and Sonora at 7:45 o'clock Saturday morning, when cars driven by Sidro Marquery of 615 West Vine street and Mrs. E. D. Farrow of Visalia, came together. Little damage was done.

Shortly before 9:30 o'clock cars driven by Roy V. Byers of 520 San Fernando road, and a person whose name canont be learned, tried to cover the same spot at the same time. It couldn't be "did" and as a result the fenders suffered.

HIGH JOURNALISM CLASS STUDIES AT PRESS

Visit Glendale Daily Press for Close Up With Advertising Dept.

Two groups of students from the department of journalism, Glendale High, under the leadership of Paul Webb, their instructor, visited the advertising offices of the Glendale Press, and were given a talk on advertising by W. L. Taylor. He told them how to prepare copy which will prove effective and the foundation that must be laid for advertising as a profession. In connection with the talk, mats were shown and typical drawings used for advertising copy, with descriptions of the manner in which cuts used in newspaper work are prepared. The necessity for attractive advertising if the advertiser would reach the public, was emphasized by Mr. Taylor, who pointed out some of the common defects in advertising copy and told the students success or failure would be largely determined by the quality of the copy turned out and the results secured for customers.

The pupils who visited the plant were: Charles Burr, Evelyn Curren, Mabelle Fischer, Fred Gleason, Marie Hearnshaw, Margaret Longley, Sherrill Osborne, Thomas McClellan, Harold Rhodes, Neal Sooy, Isabel Tousey, Dorothy Watson, Glenn Roberts, Emily Torchia, Margaret Robinson, Tamson Johnson, Wendel Burch, Irvin Carver, Horace Anderson, Josephine Garland, Loran Scoville, Margaret Sheirholtz, Marie Griggs, Fay Williams, Alice Hill, Lucille Beach and Cecil Chase.

The members of the G. A. R., Women's Relief Corps, Sons and Daughters of Veterans held their memorial services Sunday afternoon at the G. A. R. hall on South Glendale avenue with about forty members present, and Chaplain C. R. Norton in charge. The post has lost thirteen members by death during the past year, the Relief Corps seven and the Sons of Veterans one. The program included singing and short talks. A feature of the service was that of the memorial march, when those who had passed away were remembered. Twenty-one chairs had been draped and in these flowers were dropped by representatives of the organizations, who also gave a few words of commendation for the departed. Patriotic songs were sung by post and corps, led by Mrs. E. B. Moore, Mrs. Winona Crawford playing the accompaniment. Mrs. Mary Milligan, patriotic instructor, had charge of decorations and introduced the speakers.

WORTH SIX MILLIONS

That six million dollars a year is the estimated value of the investigations and experiments carried on by the agricultural experiment stations of Washington, was a statement of Director E. C. Johnson of the stations in this state; speaking to a farm bureau meeting at the Walla Walla chamber of commerce recently:

"Some time ago a committee, in an effort to estimate the value of some of its work measurable in dollars and cents, found that an additional income to the state's agriculture of more than $6,000,000 a year—more than enough to pay all annual appropriations to the state college, its experiment stations, extension service, state university, and all the normal schools—could be credited directly to experiment station work," he said.

"The work of the experiment stations in introducing and developing varieties of wheat better than those formerly grown, in prevention of smuts, in improving methods of soil tillage, in insect control in orchards, and in the prevention of such diseases as goitre in domestic animals, is well known.

"There are large benefits not measurable in dollars and cents. The estimate of the committee was for work already accomplished. Now we add to this the value of the experimental work under way today at the experimental stations at Pullman, Waterville, Lind, Prosser, the western Washington station at Puyallup, we see that here is a large asset of the state always at work developing new knowledge and making for progress.

"No one will question that this asset should be conserved and its facilities for usefulness increased as the state can afford it, in order that dividends from a better agriculture, a more profitable farm business, and a better rural life may continue to increase from year to year.

"It is my belief that the farm bureaus of this state and other states will continue to place large dependence upon the findings of the investigational and research work of the experiment stations and of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. One of their functions, therefore, may well be to guard this asset, that it may be of the greatest possible usefulness to the state and nation."

OPTIMISTIC NOTE SOUNDED BY REV. COLE

Morning Sermon Full of Cheer; Passion Play Depicted in Evening

Rev. C. A. Cole's sermon at Central Christian church, on the subject, "Don't Be Afraid of Tomorrow," was for the especial encouragement of the young people and an appeal to the older members of the church to show their faith in the young folk by giving them every uplift possible. The text was rather an odd one, from Proverbs, "When there are no oxen the crib is clean," which the speaker interpreted to mean that as lack of strong team work on a farm meant empty cribs and granaries, so absence of preparation and proper outfitting of the youthful life meant disaster to both soul and body. Some of the striking thoughts in this remarkable sermon were these: "There is hope in unrest. The complacent individual or nation never accomplishes anything. Unrest is helpful, not a sign of decadence. There is more hope for poor, blundering Russia today, with its blind groping after something better than in its supine resignation to centuries of oppression, ten years ago. And I'm no Bolshevik, either. And the generation now coming on around us will serve better than we have served, because they have the benefit of our experience and our suggestions. I have no patience with those who say the world is growing worse. I can remember things that happened in my neighborhood when I was a boy that would not be tolerated now. We must believe in and encourage the children of today for they are the men and women of tomorrow. We must have faith in God and in those coming after us. The church must be more alert to grasp the many opportunities to present Christ to the world more effectively. In the olden days men and women, as an evidence of superior piety, secluded themselves from the world and spent their lives in meaningless and profitless religious ceremonies. The Christian of today mingles with his fellow man, alert to the opportunities of helping and uplifting. Look at the wonderful strides in missions. The church I belonged to in my youth had been in existence for 40 years and yet had never sent out one missionary. This beloved church to which we belong has now three representatives on the foreign field and several others who have dedicated their lives to God's service, yet it is not yet 15 years old. I am an optimist. I believe the millenium is coming. When? I do not know, and no one else knows, not even the angels around God's throne or the Son of Man himself. But it has not yet come nor will it until the gospel has been preached to every tribe and nation. It is a happy, glorious day in which we live, the best since creation dawned, and the young people of this generation have greater opportunities before them than any preceding one It is our duty as Christians to help them to realize this."

In the evening, Dr. Harvey Hadlock presented views of the Pasion Play that has been given every ten years, with slight variations, since 1634, in Oberammergau, Bavaria. Dr. Hadlock saw the play twice, once before the World war, in 1910, and again last year. He talked to Anton Lang, the saintly man who enacted the Christ in both these presentations, and many others of the cast. The story and the pictures were intensely interesting. Anton Lang, it will be remembered, was reported as having been killed during the war and it was not until 1919, when Dr. Hadlock managed to reach the beautiful little city of Oberammergau, 30 miles from Munich, the capital of Bavaria, that the report was disproven.

Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Cram have moved from 215 South Kenwood to Alhambra, where they recentuy built a home.

CHAMPLAIN-ERB WEDDING HELD AT RIVERSIDE

Well-Known Pianist Becomes Bride of Los Angeles Business Man

The wedding of Miss Gertrude Champlain, daughter of Mrs. Susan Champlain, of 441 Hawthorne street, and Kenneth Erb, well known to many persons in Glendale and who is the son of a Los Angeles retail merchant, took place Saturday afternoon, February 10, 1923, at the pastorage of the First Congregational church of Riverside, Mrs. Erb has been a resident of Glendale for several years and is widely and popularly known in local musical circles as a teacher of the piano and for her accompaniment and solo work on numerous radio programs and at other musical entertainments.

The marriage was one of those "quietly conducted affairs" where the bride and bridegroom were whisked to Riverside without a previous announcement of their intentions to their many friends. They were escorted on their trip by Victor W. Killick, Susan B. Crump and Mrs. Margaret Reed, the latter being the sister of the bridegroom. Mr. Killick served the bridegroom as best man at the ceremony, while Miss Crump performed the honors of bridesmaid. The bride was daintily gowned in a suit of attractive brown and wore a charming bouquet of variegated sweetpeas. The marriage rites were read by the pastor of the Riverside First Congregational church.

Immediately after the ceremony a photographer occupied some minutes in "shooting" a number of photographic records of the event after which the bridal party repaired to the famous Glenwood Mission Inn at Riverside where a sumptuous wedding supper was served.

At the entrance to their hotel the bride and groom were heavily "bombed" with small bags of rice and the party became very merry. The happy couple will spend a few days on their honeymoon in visiting the many attractions of Riverside, Redlands and San Bernardino, after which they will return to Glendale and make their home here.

At a date to be announced in the immediate future a semi-formal reception will be given in honor of the bridal pafr at the home of Mr. Killick, to which all the many friends and acquaintances of the newlyweds will be invited.

HAWIIAN MOTIF AT THE FORTNIGHTLY BRIDGE PARTY

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Puffer, Sr., of 452 Vine street, entertained the members of the Fortnightly Bridge club at cards and an informal social evening at their home Saturday. Mr. and Mrs. Puffer recently returned from a trip to the Hawaiian Islands and the Hawaiian motif was carried out in decorations and favors. The guests were met at the door and decorated with leis of orange and black by Mrs. R. A. Puffer, Jr., who wore a Hawaiian costume and later in the evening executed a Hula dance.

The dining table, where refreshments were served, was most unique. Over it was suspended a large lei of marigolds and greenery, with ribbons of orange and green running from this to the place cards, which were of Hawaiian girls under a palm tree on the beach. At each guests' place was a favor of a necklace made from large round and flat seeds from some of the ilsland trees. The table was centered with two mechanical Hawaiian dolls, which to the delight of the guests, did a Hula dance. During the evening Mrs. Puffer, sr., wore a beautifully embroidered Mandarin evening coat which she brought back from Honolulu.

Those present included Mrs. Eva Barton, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ayars, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Howeth, Mr. and Mrs. J. I. Wernette, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Sawyer, Walther Puffer, Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Puffer, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Puffer, Sr.

"THE WRONG ROAD," THEME OF REV. H. C. FUNK

At the First Lutheran church yesterday, Rev. H. C. Funk, speaking of "The Wrong Road," said in part:

Text—Prov. 14:12: "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death."

It is possible for a man to sincerely believe that he is on the right road to a given destination, when as a matter of fact he is going in the opposite direction. Many people get on the wrong road looking for something easy to do. What they want is a soft snap. But the big things, the manly things, the noble things are hard to do. It is not easy to admit that you have made a mistake. Frederick the Great sent the following message to the senate: "I've just lost a great battle, and it was all my own fault." That confession displayed more true greatness than all the victories he ever won. It is a hard thing to apologize, just to be considerate and always play fair. It is a difficult thing to own up that you are to blame! but say, brother, it pays.

Another place where some folks get on the wrong road is by judging the religion of Jesus Christ by what they see in some of us poor professors. But what are we? Nothing but poor miserable sinners, saved by grace. They are looking in the wrong place. He is our Example. "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life."

We also want to pay our respects to those people who say that they make no profession and therefore are not hypocrites. What is the fact?

This: That every time you talk like that you are making a profession; and every time you tell about how much better you are than some of these hypocritical old churchmembers you are making a profession. When you go to church and join in singing the hymns you are making a profession. Some of you have been baptized and confirmed. What are you? You are deserters. Say, I'd rather be a miserable sinner, saved by grace, than belong to your crowd.

Listen: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." Ah, that sounds good to me. Now we are sure that we are on the right road, for He said it.

Kennedy, LeRoy Mason, William Weigand and Misses Josephine Farnham, Alice Farrow, Mildred Casney and Mrs. Morgan.

The song service was conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Everett Anderson, and included a solo by Miss Myra Johns, "The Touch of His Hand on Mine."

FANSET DYE WORKS OFFER THIS WEEK

In an article on the "dollar week" put on by the Fanset Dye Works of this city, in honor of its ninth birthday, that appeared in last Saturday's issue, it was said that Mr. Fanset would clean and press a suit and an othercoat for one dollar. This was an error. Mr. Fanset during this "dollar week" will clean and press a suit or an overcoat for one dollar each.

HATZ STARTS 'HOUR' SALES NOVELTY

Charles Hatz, the popular ladies' ready-to-wear merchant, has started something that should prove a big drawing card for his store. Today he will have "hour sales," the full particulars of which appears in his advertisement elsewhere in this issue.

In introducing this innovation he is merely keeping pace with his growing business, and desires to acquaint strangers with the splendid stock he carries in ladies' ready-to-wear and furnishings.

PRAYER CHANGES THINGS DECLARES REV. EDMONDS

At the Presbyterian Church Sunday morning the pastor, Rev. W. E. Edmonds, preached on the words: "But Prayer." (Acts 12:5.)

There is not a soul in all this world but can be reached by prayer. That power is in your hands and mine. It is not for God but for you to say what you will do with it.

The new-born church in Jerusalem was entering into persecution and martyrdom. James had been killed; now Peter was seized and thrown into prison with sixteen guards, ready for execution; but their enemies had failed to take God into account. The terrorized little company believed God cared, and went to their knees. In answer God sent an angel—one angel. That angel walked right through bolts and bars and sleeping guards, touched Peter, the chains fell off, and he led him out through opening doors into the city street and there left him. The liberated man came to the house where his companions were through the night besieging God for him, yet not looking for answer, and it was hard to convince them their prayer had been heard.

Prayer does change things. Don't worry, don't try to force matters; God does not run by calendar; your prayers shall be answered.

That Herod was smitten with frightful judgment, but the church of God grew and multiplied.

Look back: Jerusalem had once been hopelessly besieged by the great heathen king Sennacherib, Hezekiah, helpless, laid all before his God; and God sent His destroying angel down in the night and smote that great army. "It can't be done?" It shall be!

Queen Esther—what could a woman do before such disaster as she faced? She called her pious uncle: "I am going aside three days for prayer and fasting;" and the whole plans of hell were upset. Now Daniel—his steadfast daily praying in spite of law, his punishment in being thrown to the lions, what were the results? He became prime minister. Yet, in that great office, he took three weeks off for waiting upon God. Shame on you who are too busy!

This motto here, "Prayer Changes Things," had its origin thus: A woman in London had a brother in high position in India, a godless man. She heard a sermon on these words; she went home and prayed, "Lord God, I am going to take you at your word; save my brother! I ask, because I believe that prayer changes things." In time she heard from him that at that very time God came to him in his room alone and saved him; and he grew to be a power in Calcutta. Pray! And when the day of awards comes, you shall receive your reward.

TRAVELING CHARLIE VISITS GLENDALE

Charlie Stewart was in town.

He came from South Carolina, he says. No, he has no idea where he's going, but he's traveling.

Charlie always liked to travel. When he was young he used to say that upon the arrival of mature years, and after he had made his "wad" he would become a regular globe trotter.

Well, Chick is a trotter, all right. How far he'll get around the world at the rate he is going remains to be seen.

Charlie is a fresh-air fiend. For this reason he never registers at a hotel. He would not deign to carry a trunk or a suit case. Nothing like that for Charlie. He takes two suits around with him—the one that nature gave him, and another.

This esteemed visitor was surprised while eating breakfast yesterday morning. The Glendale police walked in on him unannounced. Charlie's table was spread beneath the bridge at the intersection of Pacific avenue and the wash, where he had been for four days. He had two bottles of milk and a quantity of sandwiches. Of course, the silver and table linen were missing, but who cares for such trifles when out in the open?

Charlie was told to leave town. He has gone.

"DISRAELI" TO BE THE SUBJECT AT TUESDAY CLUB

The program at the meeting of the Tuesday Afternoon club this week will be provided by Arthur Kachel, who is noted as an interpreter of plays and who will in this instance read "Disraeli." The study of this remarkable man which the play affords, is of intense interest and Mr. Kachel succeeds in presenting it in a most acceptable manner.

A food sale by members of the hospitality committee of which Mrs. Cable will have charge, will be held before and after the program at the rear of the hall.

As usual there will be community singing led by Mr. Kirchofer at 1:30.

PROGRESSIVE WOODCRAFT CLUB HERE

Glendale Camp No. 12886 Modern Woodmen of America will sponsor the formation of a Progressive Woodcraft Club, to be organized tomorrow night at the residence of Attorney Henry Molz, 363 West Lexington Drive.

The idea of an organization such as this one is planned to be founded upon the principles of faith, truth and loyalty, with a code of ethics, which will be a constant stimulus to the higher character of its members, it is said, is but a step ahead in Woodcraft (Progressive Woodcraft, it may rightly be called). While the membership will be composed only of members of Modern Woodmen of America, only such members who believe in the purposes for which it is founded, and who will in the daily walk of life uphold its code of ethics will be welcome.

All members of Modern Woodmen of America living in Glendale interested in an organization of this character are invited.

Truths in Epigram

The next life is but the continuation of this, and we begin there just where we leave off here.—Gerrit Smith.

After all that the professors may do for us, the real university is a collection of good books.—Carlyle.

I am but an intermittent worshipper of saints; yet I have an ineradicable belief in good men.—Aldrich.

THE PRESIDENT'S DUAL APPEAL

President Harding has taken the unusual course of devoting to two subjects, a message to congress urgently demanding action on both. He desires a merchant marine measure passed, and the endorsement of the agreed plan for settlement of the British war debt. Such appeals coming from the head of the administration could not well be ignored.

The people of this country want a merchant marine. They do not make the pretense of being, as individuals, competent to pass judgment as to the method. They realize that the government has many ships that might be made available, that the upkeep of these ships is costing millions of dollars a month. Frankly, they do not see any sense in letting the ships go to waste, and vanish the opportunity to inaugurate a merchant marine. They have confidence that there is a way out; confidence also that the matter has been given careful consideration, and they are ready to accept the verdict of the administration.

As to funding the British debt, Secretary Mellon, his statement endorsed by Hughes, Hoover, Smoot and Burton, has this to say:

"This settlement between the British government and the United States has the utmost significance. It is a business settlement, fully preserving the integrity of the obligations, and it represents the first great step in the readjustment of the intergovernmental obligations growing out of the war."

Opposition has come from the professional haters of Great Britain and apparently from no other source. Mellon and his associates doubtless constitute a better authority.

NOT ANALAGOUS CASES

Execution of supporters of the Irish republic have created a feeling of sadness in this country. The people of the United States hope the best for the future of Ireland. They believed that a basis of settlement pleasing to the majority had been reached. They have had no reason for changing this belief. And in this country the policy of majority rule is accepted; even by the majority, buoyed up by the prospect of becoming the majority.

One paper, American by location, demands that "these useless executions be stopped." Who is to stop them? By whose authority are they to be pronounced useless? The paper in question seeks to liken the situation to that following the civil war in the United States. It says this government did not proclaim that it would shoot any rebel caught with arms in his hands. Truly it did not. The situations sought to be presented as equal are not even marked by analogy. They are totally different.

In the civil war an honorable foe surrendered. The terms were agreed upon by high-minded gentlemen representing both sides. When the war was over, it was over. Had skulking bands of guerillas kept in the field, pot-shooting the majority that had elected to follow the ways of peace, doubtless they would have been treated as murderers.

The world would rejoice to see Ireland tranquil and happy. It does not see the way clear while the minority remains hostile and armed.

OVER THE LINE

Tia Juana, a resort not far over the line in Mexico from San Diego, is regarded as an excellent place from which to stay away. It is maintained partly because so many Americans have a fondness for getting to some spot where they do not consider it necessary for them to take their morals along. Such a spot usually is sought on foreign soil. It is common for those who can afford it to seek out Paris or Vienna, and there to comport themselves as though the code controlling their conduct at home had been discarded and forgotten. Tia Juana affords, although with sorry trimmings and environment, just such a retreat from the restrictions of convention.

There is gambling there, which nobody seems to regard as being square, but still it is a diversion. The dealers take the profits, the patrons the experience, this basis of settlement being the accepted system. There are races, too, of a sort. That is there are track events in season that give the visitor a chance to lose whatever he wagers, but to have a thrill in the process. He knows he will lose, but cherishes a foolish hope that he will win. Sometimes the stakes risked with the bookmaker had been stolen.

Plenty of bad liquor, perhaps aged three days in a can, is available at stiff prices. There are all sorts of illicit drugs to be had. Criminals who dare not appear this side of the line in daylight are numerous. It is possible for the visitor to rub elbows with them, although such proximity is dangerous. He may consort with flocks of dope fiends, if such is his desire.

Under cover of night regular habitues are believed to revisit their native land in order to replenish their funds, and as they do so, they keep the crest of the crime wave rolling high.

Altogether it cannot be said that Tia Juana, sordid, garish and lawless, is a particularly desirable neighbor. Nor is it to be recommended to the curious tourist.

Irish insurgents continue to burn property, including buildings of great age and historic significance. The observer from a distance, hoping the best for the future of Ireland, fails to see that much is being accomplished by the campaign of destruction.

If such determination as shown by the campaign for the capture of Alguin were applied in every case where a man charged with capital crime is sought, perhaps not so many murder mysteries would continue to be mysteries.

THE POLICY OF GREED

That the heavyweight pugilists seem likely to be under obligation to begin working for a living, is not in itself very important. Most of them could do as well as anybody with pick and shovel, or with such other paraphernalia of labor as requires small brain power to manipulate. There would be no tragedy in toil for these chaps, but the experience would irk them. The outcome attracts notice because it is the direct result of the measureless greed of the pugilists. They had been petted into the notion that if they wanted a fortune for appearing in the ring a few minutes, all they had to do was to indicate their desires; the easy public would do the rest. Husky graduates from the brakebeam, the "pork and beaners" or mediocre contests of a short time ago, suddenly conceived the notion that to see them give and take a few blows with stuffed gloves was worth half a million. The easy public became uneasy and sloughed them off.

Even this leaves the situation barren of importance save as it may convey a lesson. Pugilism is not the only field in which gross selfishness is the rule. Often it brings its own punishment. The dog that was carrying the bone, saw the reflection of it in the water, grabbed at the shadow and so lost the substance, was no exceptional creature. There are humans guided by a similar policy. The big pugilist happens to be the specimen just now available as an illustration.

EATING VITAMINES

By DR. FRANK CRANE

C. Houston Goudiss, a national authority on nutrition, has gotten out a book entitled "Eating Vitamines."

Dr. Frank Crane

Attention is called to this book because it concerns a most vital question and one that has to do with the health of the people; but that is not all. There are many books on questions of organic chemistry, but few of them are worth reading by the common people because they cannot be understood. This book is in plain English and is written by a man with imagination enough to make things clear.

He actually tells what vitamines are, or at least comes as near telling it as any one can.

The book has an introduction by Casimir Funk, one of the discoverers of vitamines.

Vitamines are all the more important because they are mysterious. Nobody has ever seen one, but for all that they are matters of life and death. Nobody has ever seen electrons or atoms either, but we could not get along very well without them. In a word, vitamines are not foods, but they are elements that make foods nourish us.

Herbert Hoover, before an audience in the Academy of Music in Philadelphia, turned to E. V. McCollum of Johns Hopkins, Baltimore, and said:

"In my estimation what you have told us tonight is the story of the most important discovery of modern times."

These two foods contain something that nobody has ever seen, but that human life depends on as surely as a steam engine depends on steam. Says Mr. Goudiss: "Men can starve while eating all the beef they want or while consuming the correct amount of protein, carbohydrates, fats and mineral salts, which scientists formerly thought contained all the elements necessary for the human body."

In other words, human beings need not only food, but fodder.

Further Mr. Goudiss says:

"Cornmeal that has been degerminated, and flour that has been bolted and sifted, are like the rice that has been polished. Their vitamines have been 'refined' away for cattle fodder. Communities which were free from deficiency-diseases like scurvy and pellagra before the introduction of refined flours have been known to develop such diseases since highly refined flours were introduced. In grain, the vitamines lie close to the husk's outer layer, and this outer layer is what the modern milling-processes tear away.

"That does not ban bread. Bread made from properly prepared flour, that is, flour in which all or a large proportion of the entire kernel has been preserved, is a vitamine necessity. It has been proved that the diet-choice of the human family is, in many instances, based on a sort of subconscious sense of what the human system needs, and bread has long been the chief among these instinctive choices."

This book is especially valuable because it gives a list of the vitamine substances and a number of practical recipes for cooking, so that the necessary amount of these food guards may be maintained.

THE RIGHT WORD

By W. CURTIS NICHOLSON

QUERIES

"He" or "Him"?

E. K.: "Is this sentence correct and why: 'It is he to be chosen'? English grammar states the subjective of the infinitive is in the objective case. Should he in the above sentence be him."

Answer: There should be an interrogation point at the end of your last sentence, in which, also, foregoing is preferable to above. The sentence you have submitted is poorly constructed, but he is the right word. You should never say "It is him". The following is also correct: He is the man to be chosen.

"Hung" or "Hanged"?

Pronunciation of Centenary

To A. F. J.: The word centenary is pronounced as follows: sen' ti-ne-ri (e as in get; i as in habit; e as in prey; i as in habit).

"Idea Is" (or Are)?

H. B. Hayler: "Will you state in the paper which of the two words, is or are, is correct in the following sentence: 'Do you know the principles upon which the reserve idea is (or are) based'?"

Answer: The right word is the verb is. Is doesn't go with principles. It goes with idea; as, the reserve idea is based.

"Lit"

To Peggy O'Connor: The word lit is used as the past tense of the verb light; as, He lighted the gas; He lit the gas. The word is not an adverb.

THE LISTENING POST

By James W. Foley

JAMES W. FOLEY

A man lived in a house.

It was not the best house in the world, perhaps, but it had walls and windows and a roof.

It afforded shelter from the wind and sun.

And from the cold.

* * *

The man had been born in the house.

And his children had been born there.

He was attached to it for many reasons of sentiment.

And so he lived there.

He had made some repairs.

Put in a bathroom and some larger windows and builded a sun porch.

* * *

The stairs were narrow and a bit rickety perhaps.

The ceilings were low.

The bedrooms were not large.

And there were some inconveniences.

But all in all it served a useful purpose in housing the man and his family.

* * *

And one day a modern friend came to see him.

And remained for several days.

He climbed the narrow stairways and slept in a small chamber and looked out of small windows.

And before he left he said to the owner:

"Why don't you burn this old shanty down?"

* * *

And the owner said: "Where should I go if I did?"

And the friend say: "Never mind. It is old and rickety and draughty and unhygienic and out of date. Burn it down."

And the owner replied:

* * *

"But it was my father's house and his father's. There is a lot of sentiment in and about it. Generations of children have been born here. It affords me a shelter. When I am worn and weary I can come here and feel comforted and sheltered and at ease. No. I can't burn it down. At least I can't until I have a better house. What have you to offer me?"

* * *

And the friend said: "Nothing at all. But you ought to get out. It is no place for a white man to live. The chimney is old and smokes. The chambers are small. The place is draughty and cold.

* * *

And the owner said: "You give me strange advice. You would have me leave my house and destroy it and then you would give me no other house to live in. Man in this world needs a house. And he should not destroy one or let it be destroyed until he has a better one to live in."

* * *

And the friend said: "I have no new house to give you."

And the owner said: "Then let me live in my own house without seeking to destroy it for me or have me destroy it. It is perhaps not as good a house as it might be. But it serves me fairly well and I am not sure that I could find another out of hand. I might turn myself into the street."

* * *

And the friend went and the man reflected: "How many there are who would destroy faith and restore nothing in the way of better faith.

My friend would destroy without replacement. He would turn me out of home and leave me without shelter."

Songs of the Poets

The Little Elf.—By John Kendrick Bangs (1862-1922)

I met a little Elf-man, once,
Down where the lilies blow.
I asked him why he was so small,
And why he didn't grow.

He slightly frowned, and with his eye
He looked me through and through.
"I'm quite as big for me," said he,
"As you are big for you."

ST. VALENTINE AND LOVE

By ESTELLE LAWTON LINDSEY

Why are martyrdom and love associated in the celebration of St. Valentine's day?

Any casual investigation of the celebration of February 14 will bring you to the statement that it is sacred to some eight Christian martyrs who at various times died violent deaths in France, Belgium, Italy, Spain and Africa.

The two most venerated of these martyrs are a priest of Rome and a bishop of Umbria; the legends connected with their deeds and sufferings are of the haziest, and they have nothing to do with love, I mean the love of men for women and of women for men.

And so we must look further. The connection is found in the fact that the early church united many heathen festivals with Christian holy days, usually synchronizing the dates and striving to nose in the Christian association the meaning inherent in the heathen.

February 14, for example, was celebrated by the Church of Rome as the anniversary of the death of seven saints and the veneration of the head of an eighth.

But, long before the days of Christ, February 15 had been celebrated by the Lupercalia or priest of Faunus (worshipped in Rome under the name of Lupercus) in the following manner:

Dressed in nothing but goat skins, the priests made a circuit of the Palatine hill, striking with goat skin thongs all women whom they encountered. This ceremony was supposed to insure fertility and easy delivery, a blessing from Lupercus, the god of fertility, animal life and husbandry.

It was this association that the church strove to destroy when it utilized the day as a sacred feast in honor of martyrs of the Christian religion. However, the ancient association clung and today we set the memory of saints and martyrs in a back chamber of memory and recognize the association of the season with love.

That is why we send beautiful cards to the people we feel tenderly toward and express our preferences by gifts of flowers. Martyrdom is a wraith of memory, but love lives forever.

EASTERN POINT OF VIEW

NEVER AGAIN

[Chicago Tribune]

As divisions of French infantry, machine guns, tanks, and artillery pour into Germany and spread daily farther, as rumors and hints of German resistance and a consequent advance upon Berlin begin to thicken the air, as Lithuanian troops capture Memel and Hungarian and Roumanian troops race each other on the marshes of Transylvania, the men who fought at Chateau Thierry and Mont Sec and over the ridges and death-swept meadows of the Argonne are doing some thinking.

They went to France, as they were told, to end the submarine menace, to free the seas, and to make the world safe for democracy. The menace of the submarine is over—until a new war and new submarine flotillas are at large. But there is very little safety for democracy or for any other institution of civilization in the world which politics and appetite and ancient grudge have dominated since we thought the world war was over. Peace, peace, we cried, but there is no peace. Only new wars for old. The war which was to end war has ended peace.

And the Yanks are thinking. We note that a Legion post in Indianapolis has voted approval of the advance into the Ruhr. It is its privilege. But will its members enlist for a new expedition to Europe? Is so, the Foreign Legion is open to them, but we are confident they will not find there many comrades from the late A. E. F. On the contrary, there is one simple phrase which we are confident is in the thought of the American soldiers of 1917-1918, the vast and conclusive majority of them. It is "never again."

The Americans who are afraid America will lose its soul if she does not go back to save Europe are usually, we have observed, the Americans who did not hasard their skins in France or Flanders in 1918. Vicarious sacrifice, inverted, was prevalent in this country after 1914, and it thrives today in comfortable quarters.

But the men who paid the price in 1917 and 1918 and pledged their lives for the cause espoused by the nation, summing up the account, we are quite sure, consider it fully paid. They have fought for France. They have fought for the safety of the world. They have fought to give peace to Europe. But Europe is at war again on its own terms, for its own ends, and the Yanks are saying: "Enough is enough. Never again."

COMMENT ON DAY'S NEWS

By HENRY JAMES

A dispatch states that 547 millionaires or "near millionaires" have started on an excursion which will cost them $1,250,000 for charter of their ship alone. The gentleman who for himself and family has the two most expensive suites pays $40,500 for them. The cruise is to last for thirty-six days.

HENRY JAMES

Perhaps this is an exaggeration of the facts. The item appears in a news service in which many readers fail to have implicit confidence. But there must be something in it, or the assertion would not have been so baldly made.

This is a perturbed world. An unduly large part of its population wonders where the next meal is coming from. Some know that it is not coming at all, and, tired of the struggle, lie down to die, hoping for rest, which is the utmost for which they may hope.

In this prosperous land, relatively by far the most prosperous on earth, the cost of living is steadily rising. This causes resentment.

To many the effort to support a family requires the full expenditure of energy, and utterly consumes whatever income may be earned.

The most recent crop of millionaires is not popular. Too many of the dollars coaxed from patriotic citizens found their way into the hands of crooks.

Extravagance is deplored. The silly crowds that lavish money just for the object of cutting a figure in New York, cannot realize how very silly they seem, or they would become ashamed, and quit.

Agitators always are ready to stir up discontent. All of these things tend to irritate peoples already by war and its aftermath, or its threat of return, estranged from ordinary, sober processes of thinking.

The laborer will wonder if Judge Gary, spending $40,000 on a short outing, is the best authority on what should be a fair day's pay.

But—looking on the brighter side—perhaps this gilded craft goes out to sea for the purpose of pouring oil on the troubled waters.

A spiritualist lecturing in the east said that big business men were needed in heaven. Nobody is in position to take issue with him on this point.

"The first thing a multi-millionaire said to me after he had passed over," continued the lecturer, was " 'Owen, I'm penniless here.' "

On that sort of a statement anybody is at liberty to take issue. The idea that the dead talk across the gulf with the ease that mortals communicate by radio, never has become completely grafted upon the normal intelligence.

* * *

According to a Hearst writer, the democrats are selecting presidential possibilities "with their usual complete and engaging lack of intelligence." Still, this quality is less marked than once in former years. Then a bunch of democrats had selected Hearst.

The writer quoted will continue to treat with disdain every selection, democrat or republican, not made by his master, who does not belong to either party.

Among stories that bear upon the face evidence of untruth, is that the vatican is entering into relations with the soviet regime of Russia, with a view to converting Russia to Catholicism.

The absurdity of the alleged plan is manifest when the fact is considered that the bolsheviki have no respect for any church and that part of their practice is to scoff at religion, at God, and at all things deemed sacred by devout peoples.

WATCHING THE PARADE

BY JOHN PILGRIM

Whenever the Colonel feels a bit discursive and good-humored he comes around and picks on me. His theory seems to be that if I get plenty of good advice I may amount to something one of these days. Though that may not be his theory at all. May be his stories are a subtle expression of his despair.

"You young fellows," he said, "give up too easily. You say 'can't' like a parrot does 'cracker.' Most usually there's a way to do the thing you want to do, if you just find it."

Away back in the middle ages the Colonel had a job that was just a job. Nowadays he has salaries and stocks and bonds. Then he needed more money than any one seemed inclined to pay him. The firm for which he worked laughed when the Colonel told them he was the best salesman on the list.

"Show us," said the firm. "There's a savage old gentleman up in St. Paul who could give us a lot of business if he would. But our best salesman has tried for a year and has never even seen him."

The Colonel was rebuffed by the old gentleman's outer guards in all the ordinary days of rebuffing, but he got the lay of the land. He discovered that the old gentleman's private office was half-way down the main hall. Four days he teetered around the front door, waiting for his chance. Then the telephone girl turned her head and at the same moment he saw the old gentleman's office door was open. He walked down and in.

"I didn't know what I was going to say," he confessed. "I had no selling talk prepared. But I determined to make him listen."

As he entered the door he sighted two bass rods half hidden under a davenport. The Colonel marks off the years by the bass seasons. He began to talk fish. They went to lunch together. They talked fish for the better part of four days. Then the Colonel said good-by. He had not mentioned business. The old gentleman insisted on knowing what he had come for.

"Not just to talk fish," he said.

So the Colonel sold him a bill of goods and he is still buying. Most jobs can be done. Only some of them take a little unconventional doing.

DO YOU KNOW THAT—?

Young diamond back terrapin fed regularly and kept warm in a hot house produce eggs one year earlier than those of the same age which are allowed to hibernate.

The skeleton of one of the cliffdwellers, not a single bone of which has been moved from the position in which it was placed more than 500 years ago, is now on exhibit in the Mesa Verde National Park, in Colorado.

Chapter VI—Continued

As usual, Loder was the first to recover himself.

"I was expecting you," he said. "Won't you come in?"

The words were almost the same as his words of the night before, but his voice had a different ring; just as his face, when he drew back into the room, had a different expression—a suggestion of decision and energy that had been lacking before. Chilcote caught the difference as he crossed the threshold, and for a bare second a flicker of something like jealousy touched him. But the sensation was fleeting.

"I have to thank you!" he said, holding out his hand. He was too well bred to show by a hint that he understood the drop in the other's principles. But Loder broke down the artifice.

"Let's be straight with each other, since everybody else has to be deceived," he said, taking the other's hand. "You have nothing to thank me for, and you know it. It's a touch of the old Adam. You tempted me, and I fell." He laughed, but below the laugh ran a note of something like triumph—the curious triumph of a man who has known the tyranny of strength and suddenly appreciates the freedom of a weakness.

"You fully realize the thing you have proposed?" he added, in a different tone. "It's not too late to retract, even now."

Chilcote opened his lips, paused, then laughed in imitation of his companion; but the laugh sounded forced.

"My dear fellow," he said at last, "I never retract."

"Never?"

"No."

"Then the bargain's sealed."

Loder walked slowly across the room, and, taking up his position by the mantel-piece, looked at his companion. The similarity between them as they faced each other seemed abnormal, defying even the closest scrutiny. And yet, so mysterious is Nature even in her lapses, they were subtly, indefinably different. Chilcote was Loder deprived of one essential; Loder, Chilcote with that essential bestowed. The difference lay neither in feature, in coloring, nor in height, but in that baffling, illusive inner illumination that some call individuality, and others soul.

Something of this idea, misted and tangled by nervous imagination, crossed Chilcote's mind in that moment of scrutiny, but he shrank from it apprehensively.

"I—I came to discuss details," he said, quickly, crossing the space that divided him from his host. "Shall we—? Are you—?" He paused uneasily.

"I'm entirely in your hands." Loder spoke with abrupt decision. Moving to the table, he indicated a chair, and drew another forward for himself.

Both men sat down

Chilcote leaned forward, resting elbows on the table. "There will be several things to consider—" he began, nervously, looking across at the other.

"Quite so." Loder glanced back appreciatively. "I thought about those things the better part of last night. To begin with, I must study your handwriting. I guarantee to get it right, but it will take a month."

"A month!"

"Well, perhaps three weeks. We mustn't make a mess of things."

Chilcote shifted his position.

"Three weeks!" he repeated. "Couldn't you—?"

"No; I couldn't." Loder spoke authoritatively. "I might never want to put pen to paper, but, on the other hand, I might have to sign a check one day." He laughed. "Have you ever though of that?—that I might have to, or want to, sign a check?"

"No. I confess that escaped me."

"You risk your fortune that you may keep the place it bought for you?" Loder laughed again. "How do you know that I am not a blackguard?" he added. "How do you know that I won't clear out one day and leave you high and dry? What is to prevent John Chilcote from realizing forty or fifty thousand pounds and then making himself scarce?"

"You won't do that," Chilcote said, with unusual decision. "I told you your weakness last night; and it wasn't money. Money isn't the rock you'll split over."

"Then you think I'll split upon some rock? But that's beyond the question. To get to business again. You'll risk my studying your signature?"

Chilcote nodded.

"Right! Now item two." Loder counted on his fingers. "I must know the names and faces of your men friends as far as I can. Your women friends don't count. While I'm you, you will be adamant." He laughed again pleasantly "But the men are essential—the backbone of the whole business."

"I have no men friends. I don't trust the idea of friendship."

"Acquaintances, then."

Chilcote looked up sharply. "I think we score there," he said. "I have a reputation for absent-mindedness that will carry you anywhere. They tell me I can look through the most substantial man in the House as if he were gossamer, though I may have lunched with him the same day."

Loder smiled. "By Jove!" he exclaimed. "Fate must have been constructing this before either of us was born. It dovetails ridiculously. But I must know your colleagues—even if it's only to cut them. You'll have to take me to the House."

"Impossible!"

"Not at all!" Again the tone of authority fell to Loder. "I can pull my hat over my eyes and turn up my coat-collar. Nobody will notice me. We can choose the fall of the afternoon. I promise you 'twill be all right."

"Suppose the likeness should leak out? It's a risk."

Loder laughed confidently. "Tush, man! Risk is the salt of life. I must see you at your post, and I must see the men you work with." He rose, walked across the room, and took his pipe from the rack. "When I go in for a thing, I like to go in over head and ears," he added, as he opened his tobacco-jar.

His pipe filled, he resumed his seat, resting his elbows on the table in unconscious imitation of Chilcote.

"Got a match?" he said, laconically, holding out his hand.

In response Chilcote drew his match-box from his pocket and struck a light. As their hands touched, an exclamation escaped him.

"By Jove!" he said, with a fretful mixture of disappointment and surprise. "I hadn't noticed that!" His eyes were fixed in annoyed interest on Loder's extended hand.

Loder, following his glance, smiled. "Odd that we should both have overlooked it! It clean escaped my mind. It's rather an ugly scar." He lifted his hand till the light fell more fully on it. Above the second joint of the third finger ran a jagged furrow, the reminder of a wound that had once laid bare the bone.

Chilcote leaned forward. "How did you come by it?" he asked.

The other shrugged his shoulders. "Oh, that's ancient history."

"The results are present-day enough. It's very awkward! Very annoying!" Chilcote's spirits, at all times overeasily played upon, were damped by this obstacle.

Loder, still looking at his hand, didn't seem to hear. "There's only one thing to be done," he said. "Each wear two rings on the third finger of the left hand. Two rings ought to cover it." He made a speculative measurement with the stem of his pipe.

Chilcote still looked irritable and disturbed. "I detest rings. I never wear rings."

Loder raised his eyes calmly. "Neither do I," he said. "But there's no reason for bigotry."

But Chilcote's irritability was started. He pushed back his chair. "I don't like the idea," he said.

The other eyed him amusedly. "What a queer beggar you are!" he said. "You waive the danger of a man signing your checks and shy at wearing a piece of jewelry. I'll have a fair share of individuality to study."

Chilcote moved restlessly "Everybody knows I detest jewelry."

"Everybody knows you are capricious. It's got to be rings or nothing, so far as I make out."

Chilcote again altered his position, avoiding the other's eyes. At last, after a struggle with himself, he looked up.

"I suppose you're right!" he said. "Have it your own way." It was the first small, tangible concession to the stronger will.

Loder took his victory quietly. "Good!" he said. "Then it's all straight sailing?"

"Except for the matter of the—the remuneration." Chilcote hazarded the word uncertainly.

There was a faint pause, then Loder laughed brusquely. "My pay?"

The other was embarrassed. "I didn't want to put it quite like that."

"But that was what you thought. Why are you never honest—even with yourself?"

Chilcote drew his chair closer to the table. He did not attend to the other's remark, but his fingers strayed to his waistcoat pocket and fumbled there.

Loder saw the gesture. "Look here," he said, "you are overtaxing yourself. The affair of the pay isn't pressing; we'll shelve it to another night. You look tired out."

Chilcote lifted his eyes with a relieved glance. "Thanks. I do feel a bit fagged. If I may, I'll have that whiskey that I refused last night."

"Why, certainly." Loder rose at once and crossed to a cupboard in the wall. In silence he brought out whiskey, glasses, and a siphon of soda-water. "Say when!" he said, lifting the whiskey.

"Now. And I'll have plain water instead of soda, if it's all the same."

"Oh, quite." Loder recrossed the room. Instantly his back was turned, Chilcote drew a couple of tabloids from his pocket and dropped them into his glass. As the other came slowly back he laughed nervously.

"Thanks. See to your own drink now; I can manage this." He took the jug unceremoniously, and, carefully guarding his glass from the light, poured in the water with excited haste.

"What shall we drink to?" he said.

Loder methodically mixed his own drink and lifted the glass. "Oh, to the career of John Chilcote!" he answered.

For an instant the other hesitated. There was something prophetic in

THE CHARACTERS IN THE STORY

JOHN CHILCOTE, member of the House of Commons, is the first man to hurry from his place when Parliament adjourns on a January night that is marked by the blackest fog in years and the news of border risings against the Persian government which are branded by

LAKELY, editor of St. George's, as the index of a long cherished Russian scheme, growing to maturity under the lax policy of the British government. Nervous and high strung, Chilcote refuses a cab and walks. In the dense fog he jostles a stranger. They indulge in good-natured conversation. Chilcote strikes a match to light his cigarette and is amazed to see that the other man is the exact counterpart of himself. They exchange cards, the stranger's revealing him to be

JOHN LODER. On the following morning Chilcote awakes depressed and irritable, being very disagreeable with his man-servant,

ALLSOPP. Left alone for a few minutes Chilcote mixes some whisky and soda, into which he drops two tabloids, and when Allsopp returns Chilcote's nervousness is apparently gone. After breakfast his irritability returns with the arrival of his secretary,

BLESSINGTON, who annoys him with political matters, and Chilcote leaves his home, wandering aimlessly and finally taking a cab to the home of LADY ASTRUPP. They chat familiarly and sentimentally. Then Chilcote complains of his nerves, recalls an appointment at Parliament and leaves. He usually carries his morphia tabloids with him, but, feeling in his pockets, finds that this morning he has forgotten them. Realizing that he has become a slave to the drug, Chilcote goes to the humble apartment of Loder, confesses his weakness and offers to change places in life with the man. Loder wires his acceptance of the offer the next day and that night Chilcote calls again.

the sound of the toast. But he shook the feeling off and held up his glass.

"To the career of John Chilcote!" he said, with another unsteady laugh.

CHAPTER VII

It was a little less than three weeks since Chilcote and Loder had drunk their toast, and again Loder was seated at his desk.

His head was bent and his hand moved carefully as he traced line after line of meaningless words on a sheet of foolscap. Having covered the page with writing, he rose, moved to the centre-table, and compared his task with an open letter that lay there. The comparison seemed to please him; he straightened his shoulders and threw back his head in an attitude of critical satisfaction. So absorbed was he that, when a step sounded on the stairs outside, he did not notice it, and only raised his head when the door was thrown open unceremoniously. Even then his interest was momentary.

"Hullo!" he said, his returning to their scrutiny of his task.

Chilcote shut the door and came hastily across the room. He looked ill and harassed. As he reached Loder he put out his hand nervously and touched his arm.

Loder looked up. "What is it?" he asked. "Any new development?"

Chilcote tried to smile. "Yes," he said, huskily; "it's come."

"No. The end of me." The words came jerkily, the strain that had enforced them showing in every syllable.

Still Loder was uncomprehending; he could not, or would not, understand.

Again Chilcote caught and jerked at his sleeve. "Don't you see? Can't you see?"

"No."

Chilcote dropped the sleeve and passed his handkerchief across his forehead. "It's come," he repeated. "Don't you understand? I want you." He drew away, then stepped back again anxiously. "I know I'm taking you unawares," he said. "But it's not my fault. On my soul, it's not! The thing seems to spring at me and grip me—" He stopped, sinking weakly into a chair.

For a moment Loder stood erect and immovable; then, almost with reluctance, his glance turned to the figure beside him.

"You want me to take your place to-night—without preparation?" His voice was distinct and firm, but it was free from contempt.

"Yes; yes, I do." Chilcote spoke without looking up.

"That you may spend the night in morphia?—this and other nights?"

Chilcote lifted a flushed, unsettled face. "You have no right to preach. You accepted the bargain."

Loder raised his head quickly. "I never—" he began; then both his face and voice altered. "You are quite right," he said coldly. "You won't have to complain again."

Chilcote stirred uncomfortably. "My dear chap," he said, "I meant no offence. It's merely—"

"Your nerves. I know. But come to business. What am I to do?"

Chilcote rose excitedly. "Yes, business. Let's come to business. It's rough on you, taking you short like this. But you have an erratic person to deal with. I've had a horrible day—a horrible day." His face had paled again, and in the green lamplight it possessed a grayish hue. Involuntarily Loder turned away.

Chilcote watched him as he passed to the desk and began mechanically sorting papers. "A horrible day!" he repeated. "So bad that I daren't face the night. You have read De Quincey?" he asked, with a sudden change of tone.

"Yes."

"Then read him again and you'll understand. I have all the horrors—without any art. I have no 'Ladies of Sorrow,' but I have worse monsters than his 'crocodile.'" He laughed unpleasantly.

Loder turned. "Why in the devil's name—" he began; then again he halted. Something in Chilcote's drawn, excited face checked him. The strange sense of predestination that we sometimes see in the eyes of another struck cold upon him, chilling his last attempt at remonstrance. "What do you want me to do?" he constituted, in an ordinary voice.

The words steadied Chilcote. He laughed a little. The laugh was still shaky, but it was pitched in a lower key.

"You—you're quite right to pull me up. We have no time to waste. It must be one o'clock." He pulled out his watch, then walked to the window and stood looking down into the shadowy court. "How quiet you are here!" he said. Then abruptly a new thought struck him and he wheeled back into the room. "Loder," he said, quickly—"Loder, I have an idea! While you are me, why shouldn't I be you? Why shouldn't I be John Loder instead of the vagrant we contemplated? It covers everything—it explains everything. It's magnificent! I'm amazed we never thought of it before."

Loder was still beside his desk. "I thought of it," he said, without looking back.

"And didn't suggest it?"

"No."

"Why?"

Loder said nothing and the other colored.

"Jealous of your reputation?" he said, satirically.

"I have none to be jealous of."

Chilcote laughed disagreeably. "Then you aren't so far gone in philosophy as I thought. You have a niche in your own good opinion."

Again Loder was silent; then he smiled. "You have an oddly correct perception at times," he said. "I suppose I have had a lame sort of pride in keeping my name clean. But pride like that is out of fashion—and I've got to float with the tide." He laughed, the short laugh that Chilcote had heard once or twice before, and, crossing the room, he stood beside his visitor. "After all," he said, "what business have I with pride, straight or lame? Have my identity, if you want it. When all defences have been broken down one barrier won't save the town." Laughing again, he laid his hand on the other's arm. "Come," he said, "give your orders. I capitulate."

An hour later the two men passed from Loder's bedroom, where the final arrangements had been completed, back into the sitting-room. Loder came first, in faultless evening-dress. His hair was carefully brushed, the clothes he wore fitted him perfectly. To any glance, critical or casual, he was the man who had mounted the stairs and entered the rooms earlier in the evening. Chilcote's manner of walking and poise of the head seemed to have descended upon him with Chilcote's clothes. He came into the room hastily and passed to the desk.

"I have no private papers," he said, "so I have nothing to lock up. Everything can stand as it is. A woman named Robins comes in the mornings to clean up and light the fire; otherwise you must shift for yourself. Nobody will disturb you. Quiet, dead quiet, is about the one thing you can count on."

Chilcote, half halting in the doorway, made an attempt to laugh. Of the two, he was noticeably the more embarrassed. In Loder's well-worn, well-brushed tweed suit he felt stranded on his own personality, bereft for the moment of the familiar accessories that helped to cloak deficiencies and keep the wheel of conventionality comfortably rolling. He stood unpleasantly conscious of himself, unable to shape his sensations even in thought. He glanced at the fire, at the table, finally at the chair on which he had thrown his overcoat before entering the bedroom. At the sight of the coat his gaze brightened, the aimlessness forsook him, and he gave an exclamation of relief.

"By Jove!" he said. "I clean forgot."

"What?" Loder looked round.

"The rings." He crossed to the coat and thrust his hand into the pocket. "The duplicates only arrived this afternoon. The nick of time, eh?" He spoke fast, his fingers searching busily. Occupation of any kind came as a boon.

Loder slowly followed him, and as the box was brought to light he leaned forward interestedly.

"As I told you, one is the copy of an old signet-ring, the other a plain band—a plain gold band like a wedding-ring." Chilcote laughed as he placed the four rings side by side on his palm. "I could think of nothing else that would be wide—and not ostentatious. You know how I detest display."

Loder touched the rings. "You have good taste," he said. "Let's see if they serve their purpose?" He picked them up and carried them to the lamp.

Chilcote followed him. "That was an ugly wound," he said, his curiosity reawakening as Loder extended his finger. "How did you come by it?"

The other smiled. "It's a memento," he said.

"Of bravery?"

"No. Quite the reverse." He looked again at his hand, then glanced back at Chilcote. "No," he repeated, with an unusual impulse of confidence. "It serves to remind me that I am not exempt—that I have been fooled like other men."

"That implies a woman?"

"Yes." Again Loder looked at the scar on his finger. "I seldom recall the thing, it's so absolutely past. But I rather like to remember it to-night. I rather want you to know that I've been through the fire. It's a sort of guarantee."

Chilcote made a hasty gesture, but the other interrupted it.

"Oh, I know you trust me. But you're giving me a risky post. I want you to see that women are out of my line—quite out of it."

"But, my dear chap—"

Loder went on without heeding. "This thing happened eight years ago at Santasalare," he said, "a little place between Luna and Pistoria—a mere handful of houses wedged between two hills. A regular relic of old Italy crumbling away under flowers and sunshine, with nothing to suggest the present century except the occasional passing of a train round the base of one of the hills. I had literally stumbled upon the place on a long tramp south from Switzerland, and had been tempted into a stay at the little inn. The night after my arrival something unusual occurred. There was an accident to the train at the point where it skirted the village.

"There was a small excitement; all the inhabitants were anxious to help, and I took my share. As a matter of fact, the smash was not disastrous; the passengers were hurt and frightened, but nobody was killed."

He paused and looked at his companion, but, seeing him interested, went on:

"Among these passengers was an English lady. Of all concerned in the business, she was the least upset. When I came upon her she was sitting on the shattered door of one of the carriages, calmly rearranging her hat. On seeing me she looked up with the most charming smile imaginable.

"'I have just been waiting for somebody like you,' she said. 'My stupid maid has got herself smashed up somewhere in the second-class carriages, and I have nobody to help me to find my dog.'

"Of course, that first speech ought to have enlightened me, but it didn't. I only saw the smile and heard the voice; I knew nothing of whether they were deep or shallow. So I found the maid and found the dog. The first expressed gratitude; the other didn't. I extricated him with enormous difficulty from the wreck of the luggage-van, and this was how he marked his appreciation." He held out his hand and nodded towards the scar.

Chilcote glanced up. "So that's the explanation?"

"Yes. I tried to conceal the thing when I restored the dog, but I was bleeding abominably and I failed. Then the whole business was changed. It was I who needed seeing to, my new friend insisted; I who should be looked after, and not she. She forgot the dog in the newer interest of my wounded finger. The maid, who was practically unhurt, was sent on to engage rooms at the little inn, and she and I followed slowly.

"That walk impressed me. There was an attractive mistiness of atmosphere in the warm night, a sensation more than attractive in being made much of by a woman of one's own class and country after five years' wandering." He laughed with a touch of irony. "But I won't take up your time with details. You know the progress of an ordinary love affair. Throw in a few more flowers and a little more sunshine than is usual, a man who is practically a hermit and a woman who knows the world by heart, and you have the whole thing.

"She insisted on staying in Santasalare for three days in order to keep my finger bandaged; she ended by staying three weeks in the hope of smashing up my life.

"On coming to the hotel she had given no name; and in our first explanations to each other she led me to conclude her an unmarried girl. It was at the end of the three weeks that I learned that she was not a free agent, as I had innocently imagined, but possessed a husband whom she had left ill with malaria at Florence or Rome.

"The news disconcerted me, and I took no pains to hide it. After that the end came abruptly. In her eyes I had become a fool with middle-class principles; in my eyes— But there is no need for that. She left Santasalare the same night in a great confusion of trunks and hat-boxes; and next morning I strapped on my knapsack and turned my face to the south."

Loder laughed. "That's what I've been trying to convey. Once bitten, twice shy!" He laughed again and slipped the two rings over his finger with an air of finality.

"Now shall I start? This is the latchkey?" He drew a key from the pocket of Chilcote's evening-clothes. "When I get to Grosvenor Square I am to find your house, go straight in, mount the stairs, and there on my right hand will be the door of your—I mean my own—private rooms. I think I've got it all by heart. I feel inspired; I feel that I can't go wrong." He handed the two remaining rings to Chilcote and picked up the overcoat.

"I'll stick on until I get a wire," he said. "Then I'll come back and we'll reverse again." He slipped on the coat and moved back towards the table. Now that the decisive moment had come, it embarrassed him. Scarcely knowing how to bring it to an end, he held out his hand.

Chilcote took it, paling a little. "'Twill be all right!" he said, with a sudden return of nervousness. "'Twill be all right! And I've made it plain about—about the remuneration? A hundred a week—besides all expenses."

Loder smiled again. "My pay? Oh yes, you've made it clear as day. Shall we say good-night now?"

"Yes. Good-night."

There was a strange, distant note in Chilcote's voice, but the other did not pretend to hear it. He pressed the hand he was holding, though the cold dampness of it repelled him.

"Good-night," he said again.

"Good-night."

They stood for a moment, awkwardly looking at each other, then Loder quietly disengaged his hand, crossed the room, and passed through the door.

Chilcote, left standing alone in the middle of the room, listened while the last sound of the other's footsteps was audible on the uncarpeted stairs; then, with a furtive, hurried gesture, he caught up the green-shaded lamp and passed into Loder's bedroom.

CHAPTER VIII

To all men come portentous moments, difficult moments, triumphant moments. Loder had had his examples of all three, but no moment in his career ever equalled in strangeness of sensation that in which, dressed in another man's clothes, he fitted the latchkey for the first time into the door of the other man's house.

The act was quietly done. The key fitted the lock smoothly and his fingers turned it without hesitation, though his heart, usually extremely steady, beat sharply for a second. The hall loomed massive and sombre despite the modernity of electric lights. It was darkly and expensively decorated in black and brown; a frieze of wrought bronze, representing peacocks with outspread tails, ornamented the walls; the banisters were of heavy iron-work, and the somewhat formidable fireplace was of the same dark metal.

Loder looked about him, then advanced, his heart again beating quickly as his hand touched the cold banister and he began his ascent of the stairs. But at each step his confidence strengthened, his feet became more firm; until, at the head of the stairs, as if to disprove his assurance, his pulses played him false once more, this time to a more serious tune. From the farther end of the well-lighted corridor a maid was coming straight in his direction.

For one short second all things seemed to whiz about him; the certainty of detection overpowered his mind. The indisputable knowledge that he was John Loder and no other, despite all armor of effrontery and dress, so dominated him that all other considerations shrank before it. It wanted but one word, one simple word of denunciation, and the whole scheme was shattered. In the dismay of the moment, he almost wished that the word might be spoken and the suspense ended.

But the maid came on in silence, and so incredible was the silence that Loder moved onward, too. He came within a yard of her, and still she did not speak; then, as he passed her, she drew back respectfully against the wall.

The strain, so astonishingly short, had been immense, but with its slackening came a strong reaction. The expected humiliation seethed suddenly to a desire to dare fate. Pausing quickly, he turned and called the woman back.

The spot where he had halted was vividly bright, the ceiling light being directly above his head; and as she came towards him he raised his face deliberately and waited.

She looked at him without surprise or interest. "Yes, sir?" she said.

"Is your mistress in?" he asked. He could think of no other question, but it served his purpose as a test of his voice.

Still the woman showed no surprise. "She's not in, sir," she answered. "But she's expected in half an hour."

"In half an hour? All right! That's all I wanted." With a movement of decision Loder walked back to the stair-head, turned to the right, and opened the door to Chilcote's rooms.

The door opened on a short, wide passage; on one side stood the study, on the other the bed, bath, and dressing-rooms. With a blind sense of knowledge and unfamiliarity, bred of much description on Chilcote's part, he put his hand on the study door and, still exalted by the omen of his first success, turned the handle.

Inside the room there was firelight and lamplight, and a studious air of peace. The realization of this and a slow incredulity at Chilcote's voluntary renunciation were his first impressions; then his attention was needed for more imminent things.

As he entered, the new secretary was returning a volume to its place on the book-shelves. At sight of him, he pushed it hastily into position and turned round.

"I was making a few notes on the political position of Khorasan," he said, glancing with slight apprehensiveness at the other's face. He was a small, shy man, with few social attainments but an extraordinary amount of learning—the antithesis of the alert Blessington, whom he had replaced.

Loder bore his scrutiny without flinching. Indeed, it struck him suddenly that there was a fund of interest, almost of excitement, in the encountering of each new pair of eyes. At the thought he moved forward to the desk.

"Thank you, Greening," he said. "A very useful bit of work."

The secretary glanced up, slightly puzzled. His endurance had been severely taxed in the fourteen days that he had filled his new post.

"I'm glad you think so, sir," he said, hesitatingly. "You rather poohpoohed the matter this morning, if you remember."

DEATHS — FUNERALS

PAUL H. BURRIS
By Hannah Luella Hukill, M. D.

A great and noble soul passed to higher planes Thursday morning, when Paul Henry Burris died of hemorrhage from the lungs, following an illness of tuberculosis, contracted three years ago while in the service of the United States Marines. Services were held for him by the Glendale Legion post, Sunday. He rests at Grand View.

Six years ago, at the tender age of fifteen, this brave lad volunteered and enlisted in the service of the sea, and offered himself on the altar of sacrifice for the freedom of the world. He developed young and was very large for his age, so his extreme youth was not suspected. He served three years under the Stars and Stripes when illness forced him ashore.

It was not his destiny to fight on the Marne, where so many of our able marines fell in that bloody conflict, but he made the same supreme sacrifice for his ideal, for his country's flag, that was made by the brave boys who fell on the sacred soil of France. A boy of fifteen, who was so unselfish, so chivalrous, and sufficiently awakened as an ego, to offer himself to his country before the call came, must have had a vision far beyond the average of the race. Those who understand the evolution of the human soul know this courageous youth has not died in vain, but that it will further his soul's progress more than any other sacrifice could have done.

It is altogether fitting and proper, in this connection, to mention the loyalty and patritism of his parents. Paul entered the marine service before war was declared between the United States and Germany. When the call came the father, although beyond the age limit, offered himself and joined the colors, leaving his wife to support herself and ten-year-old son. This is an unusual record of service. To lay one's all upon the altar of human freedom is the highest ideal to which the soul can aspire, and of our hundred million and more, who arose bravely to the occasion when the time came, there are few who have so excellent a record as this estimable family. Let us bow in holy reverence and respect to these noble parents, who have laid the life of their eldest son on the altar of human liberty.

WILLIAM H. LEWIS

William H. Lewis passed away February 8, 1923, at Bakersfield at the age of 60 years. He was superintendent of maintenance of the Lebec Lodge. Mr. Lewis was the father of Mrs. Mahannah of Glendale. Funeral services were held at 1 o'clock this afternoon at the Little Church of the Flowers, B. P. O. E. of Glendale in charge. Mr. Lewis was a member of the Merced Elks Lodge. L. G. Scovern Undertaking company in charge.

JACOB MUHLEMAN

Jacob Muhleman died Saturday at the home of his son Randall, at Cabazon, Riverside county. He was in his 90th year. He came to Glendale in 1906 and lived at 111 West Maple street from that time to about three years ago, when the old home was sold. He lived with his children since then. His wife died 17 years ago today. Funeral services were held in the Central Avenue M. E. Church at 2 p. m. today, Rev. V. Hunter Brink officiating. Interment was in Forest Lawn cemetery.

ANDREW J. LARSON PASSES AWAY AT HIS HOME

Junior Member of Firm of Endicott & Larson, Succumbs to Illness

Andrew J. Larson passed away this morning at his home, 371 West Lexington Drive, at the age of 43 years. He was born June 16, 1879. Mr. Larson was a real estate man by occupation and a member of the firm of Endicott & Larson. For a number of years he had been in charge of the bureau of assessments at the city hall in Los Angeles and was very well known there and in Glendale.

Mr. Larson is survived by a widow, Mrs. Bertha E. Larson; a daughter, Janise D. Larson, and a mother, Mrs. Bessie L. Cook of the same address. He was a member of Hollenbeck lodge, F. & A. M., a charter member of Jinnistan Grotto of Los Angeles, member of the Woodmen of the World and the Royal Arcanum. Funeral arrangements will be announced later. Kiefer & Everick Undertaking company in charge.

CHRISTIANS' HOPE KEITH L. BROOKS' THEME

Further Study of Paul's First Letter to the Thessalonians

Continuing the study of First Thessalonians, Keith L. Brooks, teacher of the Men's Bible Class of the Presbyterian Sunday School, spoke as follows, yesterday morning:

It is astonishing that some should charge in these days that orthodoxy leads to unpractical and visionary views of life, that it is nothing but a lot of beautiful talk about the supernatural. The Apostle Paul was a great theologian, yet every doctrine that he teaches emphasizes the necessity of a holy and practical everyday life. He could not teach doctrine and leave conduct to be only a matter of inference.

In the midst of his great statements of Christian doctrine, he pauses to point out that all this implies a sanctified life. In our study of 1st Thessalonians, the 4th chapter, last Sunday, we found that this involves the rigid maintenance of bodily purity, a restraint upon the evil desires. In the second section of the chapter, from verses 6 to 10, which we study today, we find that sanctification consists not only in personal purity, but the exercise of strict justice toward our fellow men. "Let no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter, because the Lord is the avenger of all such." Justice requires that there should be a fair proportion between the article and the price we charge for it. On the other hand, to give a sum which is below the due value of the article, under the circumstances, is to overreach. Such things as this do not come from a sanctified life. The Lord will avenge such acts in due time. A successful skinflint is apt to lull himself to sleep. He has escaped the penalty so long he can keep on forever. But where human justice fails, divine vengeance will, in due time, supply the deficiency. A merchant was once asked why he was so particular to give full measure. He replied, "God has given me but one journey through this world. I cannot come back to straighten things up." He knew it would cost him more to straighten it up later. You have perhaps heard of the man named Skinner whose tombstone was defaced. Someone added the word "friends" to the epitaph, which originally read: "He did his best."

Certainly it cannot be said of a true Christian that he did his best friends.

Verse 11 tells us that the Christian is to study to be quiet, to attend to his own business and to work with his own hands. Those who have no business of their own are very apt to develop wide ears and long tongues. The person who has time to hear all that may be told, usually has time to blab out all he hears. Paul tells us that Christianity is to prevent all such idle business and make men more industrious workers and more helpful to their fellowmen.

The closing section of this chapter was given for the comfort of Thessalonian Christians whose loved ones had died. They had some misunderstanding of what God's program for the future was. The apostle says: "I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep; that ye sorrow not as others which have no hope." He then goes on to tell them that the Lord Jesus Himself is coming back from heaven with a shout, the voice of an archangel and the trump of God; and that the dead in Christ shall arise in glorified bodies at that day and living Christians shall be translated together with them. Therefore they are not to sorrow for their departed friends. The soul finds relief in tears and tears are not forbidden, but it is only that sorrow which is aggravated by ignorance of what the future holds for Christians. Heathen, without knowledge of these things and without hope in Christ, give way to despairing grief. Excessive mourning therefore in a Christian looks to the world as if Christianity had failed them in the one hour of deepest need. How often these words in this chapter have comforted the departing Christian and those who have been bereaved. To one enlightened concerning Christ's second coming death is like the setting sun, gradually disappearing, only to shine in another hemisphere. It is but a rest of body, an ecstasy of spirit, until the day of the Lord's coming and the great resurrection.

LOVE AND DUTY

Affection binds with silken strings,
So fine you scarce can see,
Yet strong and firm to hold thee fast,
And lead where love may be.
So light they are, like fairy wings,
So soft you scarce can feel,
Yet stronger far these silken strings
Than duty's chain of steel.

Love's charge is laid upon thee oft
To bear from morn to night,
But love's voice is so sweet and soft
And love's hand lies so light,
The burden chafes thee not at all,
But how now wilt thou stand
To hear stern duty's loveless call,
To feel her heavy hand?

Love binds thee with a silken string,
And holds thee fast and long,
So delicate, so fine a thing
And yet how firm and strong.
The labors that affection brings
Thou doest and again—
How stronger are love's silken strings
Than duty's iron chain.

How willingly thou yieldest now,
How glad art thou to bear
The cross, the thorn upon thy brow
When love has set it there.
Yet here thy wrists from rusted bands
Are torn and bleed again
Where thou has strained to free thy hands
From duty's iron chain.

First class badges were awarded to Charles Lang and Edward Reihm, Troop No. 1, Tujunga; Douglas Barnes, Troop No. 1, Eagle Rock; Charles Kausen, Troop No. 2, Glendale.
